An imperative Hadith (saying) of the Prophet is that religion isn't what one performs formally or ceremonially but how one bargains with others. It is in this manner not adequate to be devout without performing deeds which illustrate one's convictions. It is detailed that the Prophet once entered a mosque and saw at supplication a admired ancient man with a long white whiskers. He was told that the man was within the mosque all day long, revering and apportioning the words of Allah to others. The Prophet at that point inquired how he earned his living and was told that a shipper, not known for his devotion, backed him. The Prophet commented that of the two, the shipper was without a doubt the more commendable.
